

The Mystery ^{of} the Unwrapped Royal Wedding Presents

It is the day that everyone has been waiting for: The Royal Wedding. The Royal Household has been a hive of activity for months. Invitations have been written and received, the menu has been planned and re-planned, food has been delivered and stored, cupcakes have been baked and frosted, and the all-important wedding dress has been packed away in the most secret of wardrobes.

But wait. Disaster has struck!

The wedding presents have been placed on two long tables in the Great Hall, and some naughty person has crept in and unwrapped all of them! Paper and ribbon is strewn around the floor with the beautiful gifts lying around on the tables.

Your task is to solve the clues and identify the person who has unwrapped the Royal Wedding presents!

Good luck!

Clue 1: True or False

Identify whether the following calculations are true or false. If there are more true answers, the present opener is female. If there are more false answers, the present opener is male.

	True	False X
If the Royal Household has 738 people working in Kensington Palace and 107 other people joined, there would be 835 people altogether.
If there are 96 table napkins and 12 tables, there will be 8 napkins on each table.
If the wedding ceremony lasts 100 minutes, this is the same as $1\frac{1}{4}$ hours.
If a Royal Wedding mug costs £11.15, three mugs will cost £33.45.
If the Royal Wedding breakfast lasts for 150 minutes, this is the same as 3 hours.
If there are 7 bridesmaids with 9 different types of flower in their bouquets, the total number of flowers would be 63.
If the Royal Cook orders 2050 bread rolls for the wedding breakfast and 790 are left over, that means that 1260 were eaten.

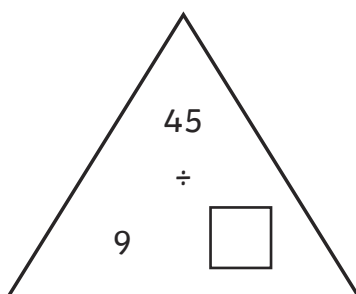

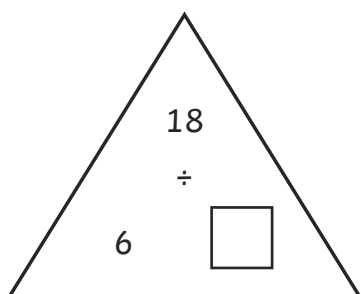

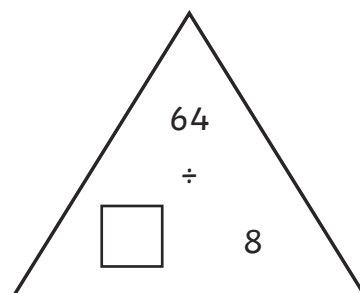

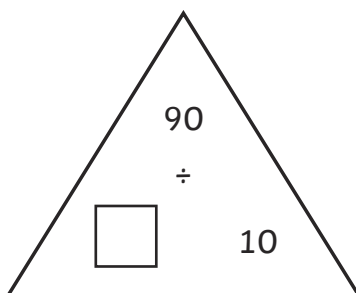

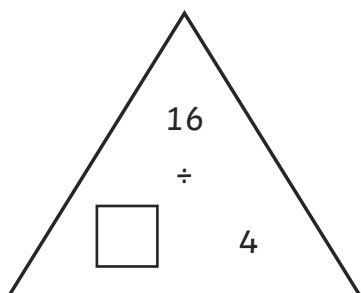

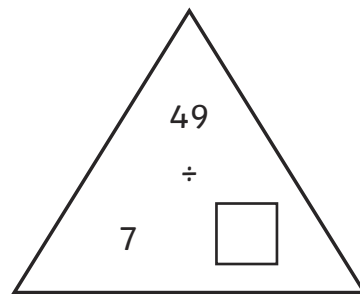

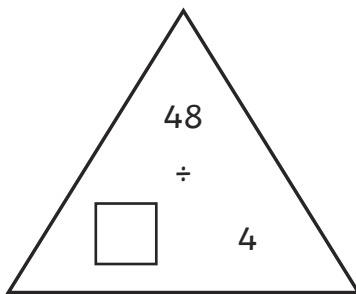

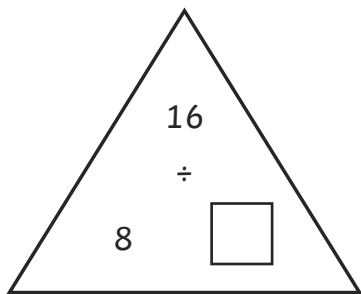

Circle your answer.

The pesky present opener was male/female.

Clue 2: Missing Multiplications

Complete these multiplication triangles. Circle the numbers used in the box below. Rearrange the circled words to solve the second clue.
